Senate vp appointed; three senators inducted

By Ruth Giachino

Rona McClure, Logan senior, is the newly appointed vice president of the Student Senate. She was appointed Tuesday by Amy Houdek, Huntington junior, who became student senate president after the resignation of James A. Dodrill, Huntington senior.

"I want to try to carry out what Amy started with the organization of committees. I will overview the committees and make sure there is always involvement with them," McClure, off-campus senator, said.

In other senate action this week, three senators were inducted. They are Lori A. Fulks, Chesapeake, Ohio, sophomore, Diana K. Null, Parkersburg sophomore, and Thomas D. Maxwell, Wheeling sophomore.

"I believe the off-campus commuters are not being represented as they should be. There are many problems to be solved," Fulks, off-campus senator, said. "One of the main problems I plan to focus my attention on is parking. I would also like to have a priority registration for commuters. Most commuters work during the day or have problems getting rides to the campus to register.

"I have written to Bowling Green College, which has a very good commuter program, and have asked for copies of their constitution so I can view it for possible ideas," Fulks said.

Fulks also plans to prepare an open form that may be filled out by any commuters who have transportation problems. In case of car malfunctions, Fulks said she will have such help available as jumper cables.

"I will be going to floor meetings and informing the residence hall floors of the senate meetings," Null, residence hall senator, said. "I have been assigned to the constituency, orientation and public relations committees which I will be devoting much time to."

Maxwell, residence hall senator, said he has ideas for his office but would like to wait before making his plans public.

O'Hanlon named acting chairman in Criminal Justice Department

By Chris Morris

Daniel P. O'Hanlon, former Legal Assistant Program director for Marshall University's Community College, has been named acting chairman of the Criminal Justice Department and director of a legal studies task force within Marshall's College of Liberal Arts.

Alan B. Gould, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, said, "In addition to directing the reorganization of the Criminal Justice Department, Assistant Professor O'Hanlon will supervise a task force responsible for developing a 'two-plus-two' degree in legal studies. The task force will also be responsible for the preparation of a suggested curriculum for pre-law majors."

O'Hanlon will fill the vacancy created by Dr. Hilary Harper Jr., who resigned as acting chairman. Harper, a founding member of the Criminal Justice Research Society, will continue to teach full-time in the department.

Community College Vice President Dr. Paul Hines and Associate Dean Glenn Smith will fill the vacancy of legal assistant program directors for the rest of the semester. Hines said he regretted losing O'Hanlon, but felt it was an excellent opportunity for O'Hanlon's professional development.

Number of copies may be reduced

Parthenon requests student fee increase

By Kim Metz

The number of printed copies of The Parthenon may have to be reduced if the proposed increase of $1.50 to the current student activity fee of $4 per student per semester is not accepted, according to Terry L. Kerns, adviser.

The increase was requested Wednesday before the Committee to Study Activity Fees by Kerns and Dr. Deryl R. Leaming, director of the School of Journalism.

Kerns said the increase would help The Parthenon maintain the production level it has kept over the past three years and compensate for rising printing costs.

Around 50 issues of 8,000 copies are distributed per semester, Kerns said. If the request is not accepted, within two to three years The Parthenon would be printing only 4,000 copies, the number of pages would be decreased and the remaining pages would be devoted to paid advertising rather than news, Kerns said.

He said he has recently received complaints that not enough papers are being printed. Night students in particular have expressed dissatisfaction for not receiving a student newspaper because the boxes are usually emptied by mid-afternoon.

The Parthenon's advertising dollars cover more than half of the production costs, Kerns said. The remainder comes from student fees.

Student Activity Fees have remained stable while advertising dollars have increased over the past three years, Kerns said.

In five years Kerns said he hopes advertising will account for 60 percent of the budget and by 1990 75 percent.

"Advertising rates have been raised to the point that we can go no higher in the immediate future without driving away many of our advertisers," he said.

The Parthenon's greatest expenditures are printing costs and personal service, Kerns said.

The paper is printed by the Wayne County News on a bid system and a budget of $68,780 this fiscal year.

Kerns said Wayne County News has been the single bidder for several years and has only made a $92 profit over the past year.

Besides helping meet an increase in the printing budget, the additional $1.50 being requested by The Parthenon would help meet expenses for personal services, travel and equipment repairs, Kerns said.

Kerns said most of the people who work on The Parthenon do not get paid, but work for class credit.

Out-dated equipment hinders cooks

By Jim Forbes

If the plan for getting new cooking equipment is completed, better food should result in the Twin Towers cafeteria, according to Vicki L. Smith, member of the Residence Hall Government Association Food Committee.

Smith, Elkins sophomore, said most complaints about food were about its not being hot. She said the way the committee is trying to improve the situation is by changing the food line and acquiring new equipment.

"The equipment that we have now is as old as the building, which is 12 years old," she said. "Some of it has not worked effectively for a long time. We cannot produce hot food because the staff has to prepare the food so far in advance to have enough to serve."

James R. Dickson, district manager of Custom Foods, said the equipment the cafeteria staff works with cannot properly prepare over 2,000 daily meals needed.

Dickson also cited an "overloaded" steamer system unable to handle the demands placed upon it.

Smith said many of the problems could be solved if the equipment is purchased.

"The problem is the bad equipment, not the food," she said. "We need to take care of the needs of the cooks and they will, in turn, take care of the needs of the students."

Smith said the committee is working both with student and the food service to find solutions.

"I think a lot can be accomplished if everyone cooperates," she said.

Re-designed hotline confusing

By Jim Forbes

Students eating in Twin Towers cafeteria might have found a bit of a change in the way they pick up their food.

Residence Hall Government Association's Food Committee and the cafeteria staff decided to try a new method to get hotter food to the students by redesigning the route of the line so that cold foods can be picked up first and hotter foods last.

"I don't like the way things are organized because it's confusing to me," Steven R. Stonestreet, Sissonville sophomore, said.

"I like the way the food is hotter, but it will take a while for me to get used to it," Jeffrey P. Withrow, Nitro senior, said. "It's a big adjustment for me."

"I think the cafeteria staff should put arrows on the floor so we know where in the world we're going," Donnie S. Stover, Cross Lanes freshman, said.

According to Dennis Daugherty, member of the food committee, students should work with the committee instead of against it in changing the food line.

"I feel that it is more walking, but the food is hotter when you actually sit down to eat it," he said. "If it does not work we will go back to the original way it was before."

Daugherty said the food committee is making plans for other changes in the Twin Towers cafeteria and is listening to students' opinions before trying new ideas.

The committee meets Thursdays in the Twin Towers cafeteria athletic lounge at 3:30 p.m. Students are invited to attend the meetings and to voice their opinions on issues dealing with the cafeteria or committee.

Grievance procedure centralized

By Mary Hooten

A Student Conduct and Welfare subcommittee has taken steps to adopt a centralized grievance procedure.

The procedure is designed to establish a place for students to file a complaint about an office, or the way a situation on campus has been handled.

The subcommittee listed offices and areas of complaint which will be investigated to determine if they have a grievance procedure in existence, Rita A. Mann, director of student conduct said.

Some of those offices include parking, library and housing.

"If students have a complaint that is not on the list, they should contact me, and I will refer it to the subcommittee," she said.

Dr. Nell C. Bailey, dean of students, developed the idea because she has been receiving complaints from students, Mann said.

The subcommittee has not decided if only one committee will review student complaints, or if a committee will be assigned to each office, the director said.

"We want students to have a place they can go to file grievances or an appeal," she said.

Presently there are offices on campus which have no set procedure for students to file a complaint.

The subcommittee plans to establish a standard grievance procedure to be used by all offices on campus, Mann said.

The Marshall Student Handbook will probably adopt the grievance procedure by next fall, she said.

FOR THE RECORD

Residence hall policies not serving students

Earlier this week, the housing office announced the mandatory policy requiring freshmen and sophomores to live in the residence halls would gain increased emphasis this spring.

We have never been impressed by the rules the housing office has used to keep the residence halls filled and the cafeteria lines moving.

The policy referred to requires freshmen and sophomores to live in the residence halls unless they are living at home or are married. If such students move into apartments without permission from the housing office, they are subject to removal from Marshall.

It is a little ridiculous when Marshall University gives itself the right to say where a student can or cannot live. We are students here and not wards of the university to be forced to live where the university desires and to pay the prices the university sets.

More importantly, the housing office cannot expect all residence hall students to be able to adapt to the same living conditions. The assumption all freshmen and sophomores can fit into the same mold is unrealistic.

A similar policy requires all students living in the residence halls to pay for both room and board. Only in the last two years, when pressure was brought upon the housing office, did an alternate plan become available. The plan still requires students to pay for 15 meals every week.

The policies have been rarely enforced the last few years because of student demand to live in the residence halls. That demand has left students sleeping in study lounges and put three in an already crowded room at some points.

The housing office obviously foresees a time in the near future when Marshall enrollment will drop possibly affecting residence hall population.

This would not be a welcome happening since costs would have to be spread among the remaining students. It could be an even worse situation, however, if students were forced to live in the residence halls in conditions they do not like. Such coercion could lead to morale problems, vandalism and maybe even violence.

As far as the cafeteria operations are concerned, the food is one of the horrors associated with living in the residence halls. This is not just negative gossip. Food in the cafeteria is often undercooked, cold and even tasteless.

The recent decision to offer students a 15-meal plan instead of the standing 19-meal plan has further emphasized student opinion concerning the food in Twin Towers and Holderby Hall. More than 90 percent of the students signed up for the 15-meal program this year.

The idea of forcing room and board on students is not the way to go about getting students to live and eat in the residence halls. The residence halls should be kept in such condition freshmen and sophomores want in them. The cafeterias should offer food students look forward to eating.

At the present time, residence halls are being filled to capacity each five years from now the story could be completely different.

Before this condition exists, we urge the housing office to continue making the changes necessary in upgrading the residence halls. At the same time, we urge it to abandon the mandatory policies that do not serve students' needs.

State's financial problems defy logical explanation

State officials are again expressing doubt about meeting the next state payroll less than two weeks away.

For the month of January, the state ended with the largest tax surplus since the fiscal year began. The overall tax collections for the first seven months are running $8.7 million ahead of estimates.

Then why is the state having problems meeting its financial obligations?

The state has been benefiting from a 5 percent spending reduction since Jan. 13 when the governor imposed the cuts. Such cuts mean state agencies are spending less money because they have less to spend.

Then why is the state having problems meeting its financial obligations?

Total expenditures have dropped off considerably since the governor imposed his hiring and spending freeze on the executive branch. The judicial branch soon followed suit.

Then why is the state having problems meeting its financial obligations?

There was speculation a freeze might be eminent before the governor announced it in January. Such speculation could have led to a spending spree, but according to state officials, December was the second lowest month of expenditures the state has experienced since the fiscal year began.

Then why is the state having problems meeting its financial obligations?

The state is not obligated to pay for services rendered for weeks and often months after the services are performed. In fact, West Virginia is known for being very slow in making its payments.

Then why is the state having problems meeting its financial obligations?

The governor's freeze has everything going for it except the facts to back it up. Where the problem is we do not know. Arnold Margolin, commissioner of Finance and Administration, blamed the situation on the complexity of state revenue versus expenditures. In other words, he cannot explain why the state is having the financial problems it is either.

All we know is Marshall faculty, staff and students paid out of the general revenue fund must play the waiting game again in 10 days to find out whether they will be paid for services rendered.

Anti-hazing legislation support explained

Marshall University's Anti Hazing Bill was written for the protection of all Marshall students or individuals who belong to any organization, not only Greeks, who may come in contact with hazing. Inflicting mental anguish or physical abuse on an individual is wrong regardless of the reason. That is why Marshall's Anti Hazing Policy and the proposed Bill exist today. The Anti Hazing Committee did not single out only one fraternity as an example. A list compiled of injuries that had been inflicted upon members from various organizations across the United States was the basis of reasoning for the Anti Hazing Bill. If there is only one individual who has been harmed through any type of Hazing, that is one too many.

Students who are genuinely concerned for student welfare, in no way "lower" themselves through supporting the Anti Hazing Bill. Fraternities or sororities are not threatened by the proposed Bill unless they violate it, just as any other type of organization. I am a member of the Greek system and a member of Marshall's Anti Hazing Policy Sub. Committee. I support the Anti Hazing Bill because it would provide possible prosecution of individuals who are responsible for the injury of others.

If one is not guilty of hazing, one should not worry about Anti Hazing laws.

Deeper coverage of anti-nuclear group sought

I was glad to see, in a recent issue of The Parthenon, a report on a meeting of AWARE — the newly formed campus Anti Nuclear group. I felt, however, that the article unduly emphasized the group's opposition to nuclear power while neglecting its equal concern with the issue of nuclear weapons. At a time when, amid the collapse of one social program after another, the United States is embarking on yet another needless, dangerous and expensive rearmament program, the campaign against such policies is a central task of any anti-nuclear group — and will remain so until the military have to hold bake sales before they can acquire new weapons.

Herd swimmers have new home

By Tom Aluise

Now that the Herd swimmers have moved from Gullickson Hall into their new home, the Henderson Center natatorium, they will encounter many changes.

Among the changes are the larger size of Henderson Center's pool (eight lanes compared to Gullickson's six), additional seating for fans, brighter lighting, improved diving facilities, complete electronic timing and a gutter network that runs along the inside wall of the entire pool.

Another feature of the pool is an underground speaker system, that is yet to be installed, according to coach Bob Saunders.

Saunders said the two speakers could be used, not just for music, but to instruct swimmers as well.

Herd swimmers commented on the changes after their victory over Virginia Military Institute Monday.

"Overall the pool is a lot faster than the last one and there's more space for air," sophomore Scott Stevens said. "I had my best time ever in the 100-yard butterfly in the medley relay," Stevens said.

Diver Dave Niblick said although he was a little nervous about using the new diving facilities, everything was great.

Saunders said the Henderson Center natatorium won't be used strictly for athletic purposes.

"Its intended use will be for competitive, instructional and recreational purposes," he said.

The Herd swimmers were to travel to Duke University Saturday for a double-duel meet with Duke and East Carolina but Saunders said the meet will probably be cancelled because East Carolina had some prior commitments.

The Herd hosts the Southern Conference championships Feb. 18-20.

Director of admissions to send 'fiche' stories

By Terri Bargeloh

The director of admissions has a couple of "fiche" stories he thinks are worth sending to colleges and universities across the country.

Dr. James W. Harless is passing the word that he is going to send out entire undergraduate and graduate catalogs on one sheet of plastic.

And this is one "fiche" story that is true.

All 269 pages of the undergraduate catalog and 158 of the graduate catalog have been placed on micro-fiche transparencies, four inches long and five inches wide. The transparencies soon will be on their way to public libraries and other campuses across the nation to informing prospective students of Marshall's course offerings.

Harless said the main advantage of micro-fiche copies over paperback versions is money savings. The cost of printing and mailing a paperback catalog is $3.50, while making and mailing a micro-fiche costs 30 cents, Harless said.

"This will be a big savings for us since we receive about 5,000 or more requests for catalogs each year," Harless said.

He said as soon as more funds are made available he plans to purchase 5,000 more copies of the 1981-82 catalog.

Harless said other advantages of micro-fiche include the savings of storage space and the time involved in searching through hundreds of pages of information.

Although few schools have begun using micro-fiche, Marshall has received about 25 micro-fiche from other schools, including ones as close as the University of Kentucky and as far away as the University of London, Harless said.

Harless said the only disadvantage of the micro-fiche is students do not benefit directly unless they have access to a micro-fiche reader. Paperback copies will continue to be sent to individual students and schools that do not have micro-fiche readers.

However, Harless said he thinks the use of micro-fiche will increase. A micro-fiche reader was purchased last year for the admissions office at a cost of $400. The James E. Morrow library houses five of the readers, a reader-printer that make copies of the micro-fiche, and more than 300,000 micro-fiche, Patsy J. Burmfield, library media assistant, said.

The types of information stored on micro-fiche in the library include magazines, non-fiction books, news reports and government papers such as the United State Constitution and the Bill of Rights, Burmfield said.

Herd trying to fight off 'loser's syndrome'

By Patricia Proctor

The Thundering Herd basketball team will be trying to fight off what Coach Bob Zuffelato calls a "loser's syndrome" when it hosts Southern Conference leader University of Tennessee at Chattanooga 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Cam Henderson Center.

"We've had a rough weekend, a very rough weekend," Zuffelato said in reference to the road losses to league opponents Furman and The Citadel which dropped the Herd to 11-8 overall, 4-6 in mental thing than a physical thing at this point. You almost get into a loser's syndrome, and find new ways to lose from thinking negatively, instead of thinking positively, and trying to see the things you do when you are winning."

Zuffelato said although the players always feel pressured, since they are in a skid, they are probably feeling even more now.

UT-Chattanooga Coach Murray Arnold said he thinks the Herd is capable of playing better basketball.

"I think Marshall has a very fine ogy won't work with this team, because we can't feel sorry for anyone, we just have to play," he said.

Zuffelato said that four previous close losses for the Herd caused the last two Marshall losses.

"Last weekend was like that Aqua Velva commercial where the guy gets slapped in the face and says "Thanks, I needed that," he said. "I think we needed that rude awakening to make us see the fact that we are the same bunch of guys that started this season winning. The trip back was very disheartening after The Citadel game—no ranting or raving, but everyone was stunned and embarrassed."

the conference and six losses in the last seven games.

"We're trying very hard to snap out of this thing," he said. "Every person in this program, at this point in time is searching for the answer, and looking to place the blame somewhere. Like I said to the players, I don't blame you for the slump, but I don't blame the coaching staff either.

The fact that the Herd's next opponent is UT-Chattanooga does not discourage the coach.

"Some people would look at that and say, 'Oh gee, that's not good,' but I think it couldn't come at a better time," he said. "I look on it as a challenge, and I think the players look at it as an opportunity."

Zuffelato said the Herd's slump is "crazy."

"If it were one thing all the time, it would be easy to correct, but it isn't," he said. "Right now, I think it is more of a basketball program and team with outstanding personnel, which they have certainly shown earlier with their great early season victories," Arnold said. "With the rest since Monday night's game, and them being back at home again, I think they will be ready to play at full force Saturday night."

The Mocs played a make-up game against Western Carolina last night and will play VMI tonight before coming to Huntington.

"This game against Western Carolina will make it a lot harder to be as prepared as we would have liked to have been for the Marshall game," he said.

In response to Arnold's remarks, Zuffelato said, "I think Murray is the eternal pessimist and psychologist. Right now he is looking to put us in the frame of mind where we will have some sympathy."

"At this point, that kind of psychol-

LaVerne Evans tries to go around Coach Zuffelato during Wednesday's practice. The Herd will try to break a four-game losing streak when it plays UT-Chattanooga Saturday night.

Saturday's game attendance could set record

By Leskie Pinson

Marshall could set an all-time home attendance record at its basketball game against UT-Chattanooga, at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

The current single-season record is 95,358, set in 1971-72, but after 11 games in the new Henderson Center, the Herd stands just 5,491 short of that mark.

Marshall's least-attended home game this season was a non-conference tilt with Ohio Wesleyan, which drew 5,637.

Boosted by a pair of sellouts that attracted 10,250 each, the average home attendance is 8,078. This tops the previous all-time single game record of 7,000 set in 1970 against Morehead State.

On the road the turnouts have been less, with 53,524 fans in eight games. But this figure may be deceptively high as 32,037 attended the two-night Lobo Classic in Albuquerque, N.M.

The Herd's current skid has not appeared to dampen attendance. After a loss to Western Carolina attracted 7,257, a total of 8,843 saw the next game against Davidson.

Her...d to play JMU at home

By Tim Stephens

The Marshall University women's basketball team hosts the James Madison University Duchesses Saturday night at 5 p.m.

Marshall (6-11) beat Concord College 74-45 Tuesday night to snap a three-game losing streak.

Marshall is led by senior forward Deanna Carter, who averages 11.3 points a game.

Carter is Marshall's fourth 1,000 point scorer after the Concord win in which she scored a career-high 25 points to make her all-time total 1,009. She is also the Herd's all-time leading rebounder.

The anticipated starting lineup for the Herd is Carter, Carrie Gibson, Kim Mudge, Barbara McConnell, and Lisa Pruner. Gibson is leading rebounding with an average of 8.5 rebounds per game.

James Madison's record is 5-11. The Duchesses lost to sixth-ranked Old Dominion Tuesday.

for the men's track team. Barring any more delays, the Herd will run its first meet inside Henderson Center.

The preliminaries and field events are scheduled to begin at approximately 6:30 p.m., and the running events are scheduled to start near 7:45 p.m., Head Coach Rod O'Donnell said.

O'Donnell said he is not sure if there will be any admission fee charged, however, he said that he is very doubtful there will be.

"I am going to press them not to," he said.

The meet will be the Herd's first duel meet this season.

"It should be a pretty close meet.

They are very strong," O'Donnell said. "Ohio University has a super team."

Previous problems with not being able to move the bleachers back prevented the first meet scheduled for the Henderson Center; the Green-White Meet which was to be run Jan. 22.

However, the problem has since been solved and there should be nothing to stall today's meet, O'Donnell said.

"It will be a tremendous thing for the program," he said in reference to the indoor track program at Henderson Center.

"People should really like it, since an indoor meet is like a three-ring circus," O'Donnell said. "There is always something going on."

Sprinter Cris Gibson is back recovering from his injury, O'Donnell said. Though he is still not back in top form, he did compete in the Virginia Tech Classic in Blacksburg Saturday, O'Donnell said.

However, things do not look as good for fellow sprinter Brad Hanson. Hanson is not expected to even begin training until later this month, O'Donnell said.

The last indoor meet to be run in the Henderson Center this season has been scheduled for next weekend.

"I would like to get at least four for next year," O'Donnell said.
